The Prime Fishing Season in Cape Verde

If you’re planning your trip, timing matters. The peak season for big game fishing in Cape Verde typically runs from April to July. This is when blue marlins are most active in the area, and you’ll have the highest chances of encountering one of these massive fighters.

That said, fishing in Cape Verde is good nearly all year round. Outside of peak marlin season, you’ll find yellowfin tuna, dorado, wahoo, and other exciting species ready to bite. Regardless of when you visit, the waters here rarely disappoint.

Species You Can Catch on a Big Game Fishing Trip

Blue Marlin – The Prize Catch

The true king of Cape Verde’s waters is the mighty blue marlin. These fish are legendary for their size, strength, and fighting ability. It’s not uncommon for blue marlins here to tip the scales at over 800 pounds, with some pushing past the 1,000-pound mark. Anglers come from all over the world for the chance to tangle with one of these giants.

Catching a blue marlin isn’t easy, but that’s what makes it so rewarding. The fight can last hours, and you’ll need both strength and patience to bring one alongside the boat. But once you’ve battled a blue marlin, you’ll have a story to tell for the rest of your life.

Yellowfin Tuna and Other Predators

While marlin may steal the spotlight, Cape Verde's waters offer plenty of other trophy fish. Yellowfin tuna are fierce fighters and prized by both sport fishermen and seafood lovers alike. These powerful fish can reach weights of over 200 pounds and will test your endurance on the rod.

Other popular catches include wahoo, with their lightning-fast strikes and sizzling runs, as well as dorado (also known as mahi-mahi), prized for their acrobatic jumps and stunning colors. Sailfish and amberjack round out the list of frequent catches, making sure there's always something exciting on the line.

Techniques Used in Big Game Fishing

When you head out on Miss Angela, you'll likely be using a method called trolling. This involves dragging baited lines behind the moving boat to attract predators like marlin and tuna.
